Family Ties.

A foreign exchange brings us the story of a rather vulgar personage, only a few months a marquis, who managed to get himself invited to a court ball. The new-begged marquis could not contain himself for joy, and exhaled proud satisfaction at every pore.

Casting an Olympian glance around the room he chanced to spy among the ladies the tall, angular figure of an elderly matron with pressed lips as though afraid of wasting her breath, and as lean as a lath.

"Who is that nanny-goat?" said the noble lord to a gentleman standing beside him.

With a knowing smile came the reply:

"That nanny-goat is the ambassador of S—, the mother of the kid who is giving her his arm, and the wife of the old buck who has the honor of speaking with your excellency."

Bread-Making at the Fair.

New points and improvements are constantly being discovered even in the most familiar processes. Many of these were gained by housekeepers who at the Woman's building at Jackson park listened to Mrs. Rorer's lecture on the art of bread-making with yeast. She gave the relative values of high and low yeast, and high yeast in its growth in bread was illustrated by the growth of the plant in soil. She said: "The idea of letting the sponge stand over night has gone out of date. Bread-making is easy if the cook will understand a few essential principles." Mrs. Rorer advocated the theory that six o'clock dinners were best for health, and said the idea of heavy meals at noon was against the action of nature. During the next lecture she made Dutch corn pudding with apricots, hominy croquettes and meat sauce.

OUT OF SERVICE.

Chaplain Scott Receives Notice of Retirement.

Ordered to Report at Ft. Huachuca.

How He Obtained the Title of the Fighting Parson.

The Best Known Chaplain in the Service Will Hereafter Call Phoenix His Home.

Chaplain Scott was in town yesterday and received an order from the war department directing him to return "home" and notifying him that he would be retired from the service, having become incapacitated by reason of wounds received during the rebellion.

The "home" to which reference is made is Fort Huachuca where he is stationed though he has a much more pleasant home in the valley and by the way one of the most pleasant in the valley.

Nearly a year ago he was granted a six months' leave of absence from his post, but shortly before the expiration of the term he asked for an extension so that his retirement from the army may be said to have taken place at that time. It will probably be a year before he is superseded and formally retired on three-fourths pay. His home, the chaplain says, will then be Phoenix. Chaplain Scott's military service from the beginning has been unique. At the outbreak of the war he was pastor of the Second Baptist church, Syracuse, N. Y. His zeal for the Union was second only to his zeal for the church and after Lincoln's first call for volunteers he traveled about the country urging patriots to action.

On one occasion, in the course of an address, one of his auditors replied: "Mr. Scott, we'll follow you to the war." Instantly Mr. Scott determined to be a soldier and immediately began to raise a company composed for the most part of members of the church. Its personnel was striking; it was made up of men who were then or have since become well known throughout the country. Its first lieutenant was Tom Lounsbury, a stripling fresh from Yale, but who is now famous as Professor Lounsbury, recognized everywhere for his learning.

In ten days after this company had been mustered into service it was in the heat of action at Maryland Heights, where Captain Scott received the wounds which now incapacitate him for further service. He was not a chaplain then but his time was spent between preaching and fighting and he naturally acquired the sobriquet of the Fighting Parson. His reminiscences of those days are extremely interesting as well as highly amusing. He was at Gettysburg and during the fearful cannonading which immediately preceded Pickett's famous charge, he lay with his face flat upon the ground bemoaning the activity of the rebel batteries and the accuracy of aim of the rebel gunners.

Says he, "I never heard so much noise; there could not have been more. Shells were constantly falling among us, plowing up the earth and sometimes almost burying us. I was not a heavy weight then but I remember my most sincere regret as I lay there flattened out like a postage stamp, was that I was not thinner. At length there was a slight lull in the cannonading; the screaming of the shells was less frequent and the roar of the batteries was no longer incessant, so that those of us who lay near enough together could make ourselves understood. Lounsbury lay above me further up the hill. Without daring to raise his head to look backward, he looked under his arm pit down at me, and cried, 'Say, Captain, it would be awfully disgusting to be killed in this position.' An observation, in which the captain fully concurred."

THE BEE HIVE FAILURE.

No Developments of Extraordinary Interest.

An Informal Statement of Resources and Liabilities Makes a Favorable Showing.

There were no developments yesterday in the Bee Hive failure, other than those already detailed in THE REPUBLICAN, and there was certainly nothing in the appearance of things at the store to indicate that there had been a failure. The receiver, Mr. Henshaw, was busily engaged in acquiring a knowledge of the details of the business and the same force of clerks that have become familiar to the patrons of the store, were at work as usual. The receiver said that he thought he would be able in a short time to adjust matters, so as to re-transfer the management of the store to Mr. Winters, as the showing made by an inventory is quite flattering.

Beside the indebtedness secured by mortgage, $22,500, there are other liabilities, which, however, do not amount to a large sum in the aggregate though the exact amount has not yet been given out.

In addition to the estimated value of the stock, $40,000, as given in THE REPUBLICAN yesterday, there are other assets, such as accounts horses, cattle, real estate, etc., which swell the total to $67,785. From these figures it would appear that a satisfactory adjustment may be easily reached.

Both the creditors and Mr. Winters are fortunate in the selection of Mr. Henshaw as manager. He is a gentleman of ripe business experience, quick and active, qualifications particularly valuable in affairs of this kind.

It is said that the failure was not absolutely necessary. Though a failure

Baby's Profession.

A Parisian stroller has picked up the following particulars of a conversation which passed in an emigration office. The father of a family presents himself and asks for tickets.

"How many are you?" asks the agent.

"Three—I, my wife and my child."

"Good; your age, your profession?"

"Thirty years, carpenter; my wife, twenty-four, needle woman."

"The boy?" asks the agent.

"Seven months."

"His profession?"

"The father's eyebrows formed gothic arches on his forehead."

"His profession, I say?" repeated the agent, angrily; "we have no time to lose."

"The father reflects, and at last replies:

"Bachelor!"—Boston Globe.

Military Expedition.

It is well to have a definite plan of action in case of emergency and danger. Commandant Parquin, in his "Souvenirs and Campaigns of an Old Soldier of the Empire," tells an amusing story illustrative of the courage of the French infantry in Spain. He says that the infantry had a courageous confidence in themselves which was fine, but sometimes led to disaster. One day he reprimanded some soldiers that had allowed themselves to be left far behind their regiment and the cavalry of the rear guard. "What should you do," he asked, "if, separated from the army as you are, a band of the enemy's guerrillas surrounded you?" They replied, gravely: "Lieutenant, we should form a hollow square. There were three of them.—Youthful Companion.
